THE DREADED SQUARE BRACKET.

A square bracket denotes an objection made by Parties during international negotiations to a treaty's text. Parties argue, arm twist, lure and horse-trade with other Parties in order to buy their position. In climate change treaties an incredible 4.2 million brackets have been added or removed, without making any headway. In the meantime, the poor and the vulnerable can wait. More consultants, advisors, PR fixers, lawyers, politicians - their wives and husbands, boy-friends and girlfriends - fly to Geneva, Kyoto, Buenos Aires, Bonn, Marrakech, New Delhi, Nairobi, Bali, Poznań - places that are off the map and to others that will be inundated before the treaty comes into force. It is a mini-industry this, with a massive carbon footprint of its own. Hurricanes Katrina and Hernandez can come and go, Darfur and the Sahel can have cake (who stopped them?!), farmer suicides in Vidharba can continue, but please don't let the cries reach us. As for us, let's plan for the next round of negotiations. The Party continues. Here's to more square brackets...and hic, to more methane from Stellanbosch. See you in Copenhagen in December 2009.

The world's 100 largest cities are expected to use 100 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity by 2025. That's 100 billion kilowatt-hours of electricity.

In 2007, 211 elephants died. 200,000 people are expected to die from drought and heat in 2025. 100 billion U.S. dollars.
